Michigan poised to ease Medicaid work requirement reporting rules

Jonathan Oosting, The Detroit News | Published 12:06 p.m. ET Sept. 11, 2019 | Updated 12:19 p.m. ET Sept. 11, 2019

Lansing— Michigan is poised to ease compliance reporting rules before starting to enforce its controversial Medicaid work requirement law next year under legislation heading to the desk of Gov. Gretchen Whitmer.

The state Senate on Wednesday gave final approval to a bipartisan plan negotiated by Majority Leader Mike Shirkey, R-Clarklake, and Sen. Curtis Hertel, D-East Lansing, that would simplify monthly reporting rules for able-bodied Healthy Michigan enrollees.

The proposal is designed help lower-income residents keep their health insurance if they are attempting to comply with the law and prevent them from losing coverage because of overly complex administrative rules.

Michigan Medicaid rules change soon. Can cool envelopes help avoid confusion?

The Medicaid form is earning raves from advocates such as Alison Hirschel, director of the Michigan Elder Justice Initiative, who said even experienced attorneys have had trouble sorting through health benefits.

The new letter is “outstanding” and “the best communication I’ve seen from them,” she said.
